

How come we never hear of Jeff offscreen? MOVIELAND tracked this handsome actor down and found the new star of TV's "TEMPLE HOUSTON" show stays home 'cause it's a regular...

HUNTER'S PARADISE!

Jeff really digs art and lovely things. One of his favorites is this carving from the Philippines.

Jeff's proud of this unusual cabinet from North Africa. He picked up most of his collection while shooting in foreign lands.

VERSATILITY PLUS—that's Jeff Hunter. He's a terror on the trampoline, knows all about art, is a perfect husband and a loving father. All this and he's the utter end in good looks!

Jeff's one of those men who was devastatingly handsome in his teens . . .

but who is even more so now. He just gets better looking all the time—but now, along with the looks, he radiates strength, ruggedness, well, all the things he really is—plus sophistication and quiet self confidence.

Jeff Hunter's favorite role is that of being a family man. His wife, Dusty, and sons Todd and Steele get an art lesson.

Jeff himself admits that his role in "King of Kings" is responsible for a good bit of the serious side he has. Because from that time on people have been writing him—not just fan letters, but asking for advice and telling him their problems. He likes his fans and doesn't let them down. His role in that movie has long been remembered and brought him many fans in all age groups. It was bound to have a sobering influence on him. That and, of course, his wonderful family. A man couldn't ask for more! Dusty shares Jeff's interest in art, and the lovely objects he collects on trips. Besides, she's full of fun and a happy person. They both adore their children (they have another boy) and the whole family is interested in Jeff's new venture into TV.

Among the movies he's made were roles in, "A Kiss Before Dying," "No Down Payment," "Love and War," Sgt. Fuller in "The Longest Day," and many others. So be sure to watch for him Thursday nights on NBC. As Temple Houston he makes the handsomest lawyer you ever did see riding the range.

When Jeff and Dusty want to get away from it all, they pack up the family and drive down to their beach home.

Too cold for swimming, the boys work out on the trampoline. They're all expert at the sport—except for Henry, his youngest son, who's inside napping. Steele teaches Todd a few new tricks.

Jeff's always great in his roles, but playing Jesus in "King of Kings" gave him a rather austere image. He's looking forward to playing "Temple Houston," a sort of traveling lawyer.

Of course, he won't have as much time for family fun now that he's in a series, but Dusty and the children adore watching Jeff on TV, too.
